Editor's Welcome

NIMMOH'S EASTER EDITION

Easter at Nimmoh's has always been about one thing, slowing down just enough to enjoy where you are. This year, we've made that even easier, whether you're staying with us, passing through Nanyuki, or simply looking for a better way to spend your day. You'll notice a few exciting additions. At Riverside, we've opened a new kitchen perched right at the top, designed to serve our in-house guests with fresh, delicious meals, but also extending that same experience to the wider Nanyuki community. If you're nearby, or even tucked away in your own Airbnb, you can now enjoy Nimmoh's meals delivered straight to your door, on us.

We've also gone digital in a way that actually makes life simpler. Our new website is clean, easy to navigate, and built with you in mind, whether you're booking your next stay or exploring options. Alongside it, we've created a Nanyuki travel guide that goes beyond the usual recommendations, helping you discover the kind of experiences that turn a short stay into a memorable one.

And because not every great experience requires an overnight bag, we've introduced our daytime packages across more than 100 properties. Whether you're a podcaster looking for a quiet, inspiring setup, a team in need of a creative breakout space, or just someone who wants a beautiful place to work for the day, Nimmoh's now fits into your schedule, not the other way around.

This edition also shines a light on people who are shaping the Nanyuki experience in their own way. We feature Joan, founder of Luxhuman Capital, who has built a strong reputation in the HR space by combining thoughtful hiring with a sharp focus on compliance. We also spotlight Mungai, a style expert and head barber at Scissors Kinyozi, whose craft continues to redefine grooming as part of the modern lifestyle.

This Easter, whether you're here for rest, work, or a bit of both, we're ready to host you a little better than before. And yes, we're still making sure you don't have to lift a finger unless it's to reach for another cup of coffee.

Warm regards,
The Nimmoh's Team

Pahali Tulivu

Where Nanyuki Slows Down

In a town known for movement, adventure, and escape, there's a quiet shift happening, a growing need for spaces that stand out.

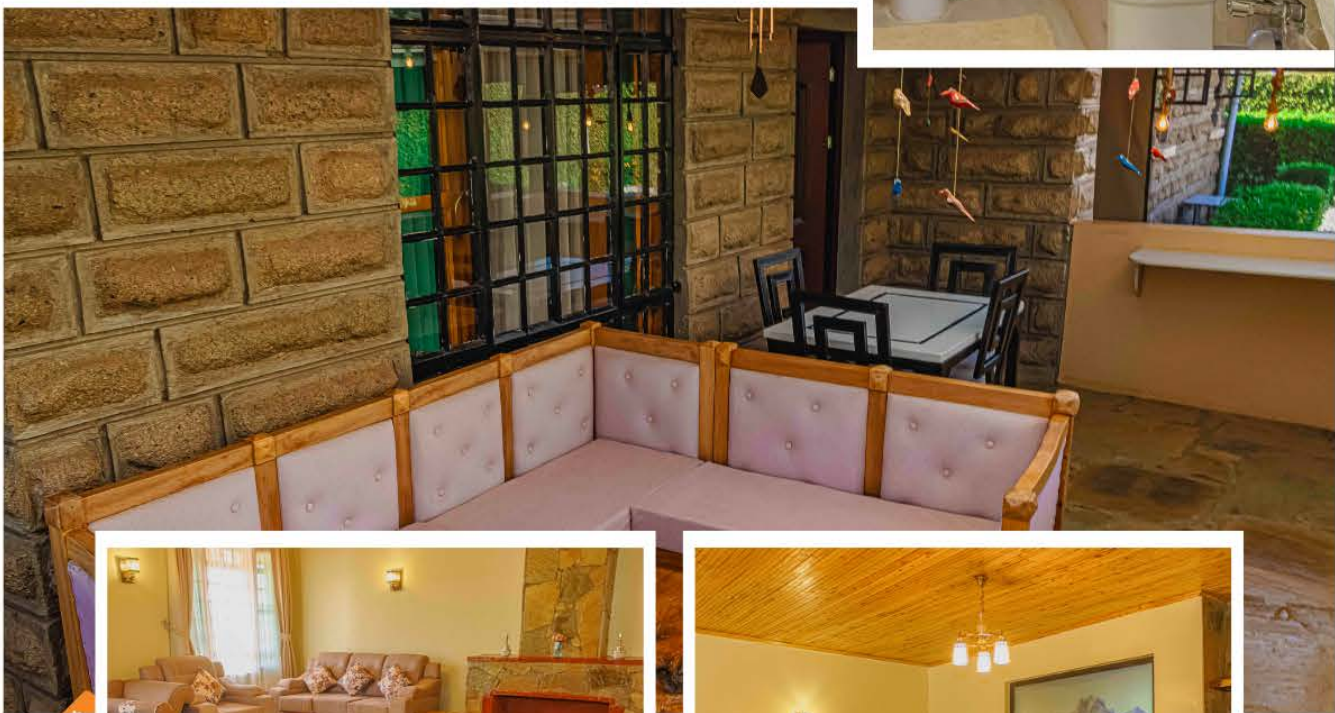

Pahali Tulivu, loosely translated as "a peaceful place," is exactly that. It's not about grand gestures or over-the-top experiences. Instead, it's about intention. A space thoughtfully designed for those moments when you need to step back, whether from work, from noise, or simply from the pace of everyday life.

Set within the charm of Nanyuki, Pahali Tulivu offers something increasingly rare, stillness without isolation. You're close enough to everything the town has to offer, yet far enough to enjoy uninterrupted calm. It's the kind of place where mornings feel unhurried, afternoons stretch just a little longer, and evenings arrive gently.

If for the remote worker, it becomes a productive sanctuary, a place where focus comes naturally and distractions fade away. For creatives, it offers a blank canvas, quiet, inspiring, and free from interruption. For teams, it transforms into a thoughtful breakout space, ideal for strategy sessions that require clarity, not chaos. And for those who simply need a pause, it delivers exactly that, no expectations attached.

Shaping Talent in Nanyuki

A deep dive into HR, and the niche Joan Ndamaiyu has carved out

Local talent remains a powerful advantage. Professionals from Nanyuki understand the market and bring long-term value. Businesses that build from within, through training and mentorship, create stronger, more sustainable teams.

As Nanyuki grows, so will its workforce, becoming more skilled, digital, and culture-driven. The businesses that invest in people, leadership, and systems today will define its future.

“Nanyuki doesn’t lack talent, it lacks visibility. The real opportunity lies in recognizing and developing what already exists.”

Nanyuki doesn’t have a talent shortage, it has a visibility problem. Skilled professionals exist both in the local market and within organizations, but many businesses rely on narrow hiring channels while overlooking high-potential internal talent. Those that invest in structured hiring and talent development see stronger outcomes.

Too often, companies focus on hiring instead of retention. Filling roles feels like progress, but employees leave due to poor leadership, unclear roles, and limited growth, not just pay. Businesses that prioritize culture and development gain stability and performance.

The real constraint is the skills gap. Many teams lack trained managers, structured customer service skills, and digital proficiency. Targeted upskilling and leadership development remain critical to unlocking growth.

Employers also lose talent by delaying structure. Without clear roles, systems, and career pathways, even strong employees disengage. Today’s workforce, especially younger professionals, values growth, clarity, and culture over salary alone.
